Press Release Body: Chicago, IL (USA) - April 4th 2008 - Workwhistle, the new online work at home job network which connects those seeking to work from home with legitimate home-based job opportunities, today launched a National Work at Home Survey in order to try to reveal the experiences of home-based staff and work-from-home job seekers across America.

The Workwhistle home working network was conceived in order to confront a scam filled sector - the work-at-home industry - where many home based jobs are actually bogus schemes designed to take your fee or initial investment. But many thousands of people a day search for 'work at home' or 'work from home' and many regular, hard working people would like to discover a legitimate home business or home income stream; especially as the rise of faster broadband connections and Web 2.0 tools have opened up telecommuting and from-home networking like never before. The National Work at Home Survey has been set up to try to record and publish, openly, what hard working Americans have discovered about seeking, finding and then actually earning from 'work at home'. Is it actually possible to build a work at home career?

Work from home job seekers are invited to fill out 10 quick, anonymous questions to help us share the real picture of work from home job seekers across the US & Canada by visiting the National Work at Home Survey.

The Workwhistle work at home network includes a regular news feed of recent work at home related articles, work at home job listings, useful home working links, and a forum for potential home-based workers to discuss issues or obtain advice from others with telecommuting experience. Job seekers looking for work at home via Workwhistle should visit Work at home jobs. Employers with work at home vacancies should visit Work at Home Job Posting to post their vacancy on the Workwhistle site.
